Health & Safety Inspector wins unfair dismissal claim

The employment tribunal finds Prospect member, Loraine Charles, was dismissed unfairly by the Health & Safety Executive.

Loraine had worked for HSE for over 16 years and was very well respected by colleagues. Following an incident in 2016 she was dismissed for failing to comply strictly with procedures on one inspection. At the time many of her colleagues were so outraged by the dismissal that they held workplace protests.

Prospect supported Loraine's case of unfair dismissal and the case was eventually heard over three days earlier this year.

Stephen Marsh, from Garden Court Chambers represented Loraine in the tribunal. Jez Stewart, negotiations officer, gave evidence to the tribunal along with four inspectors who were Prospect union reps or had worked with Loraine.

The Judge found the dismissal was unfair because the manager dealing with the original decision to dismiss and the appeal manager had not followed a fair procedure. Particularly on appeal, new matters were included in the reasons for rejecting the appeal that had not been put to Loraine.

Marion Scovell, head of Prospect legal, said: "We felt strongly that the dismissal was unfair, as did so many of Loraine's colleagues, and I am delighted that she won the case."

Prospect seeks judicial review of civil service pay limits

The High Court has determined that an application for judicial review by Prospect, PCS and FDA, should be accelerated and heard in early October.

The action comes after the Cabinet Office issued guidance on pay which limited increases to 1.5% for 2018-19.

The unions wrote to the government on 17 July offering it the chance to withdraw the pay guidance or face legal action. The government failed to respond and revealed in early August that they never intended to consult unions on civil service pay.

Prospect general secretary, Mike Clancy said: "Hundreds of thousands of civil servants are relying on the outcome of this hearing. Prospect is committed to challenging this derisory pay offer which demonstrates the government's unwillingness to engage and reward staff delivering critical national policies, such as Brexit."

Tribunal finds Ritzy union reps were unfairly dismissed

The employment tribunal has ruled that BECTU union representatives at Picturehouse's Ritzy cinema were unfairly dismissed in June 2017.

The dismissals occurred within the context of the long-running industrial dispute over Picturehouse's failure to pay the Living Wage.

Tribunal finds Ritzy union reps were unfairly dismissed

The dismissals were unfair for a number of reasons, including that there was a lack of neutrality at the investigation and disciplinary stages and there was an assumption of guilt on the part of the claimants.

Disappointingly the majority of the tribunal did not find that the members had been victimised for union duties.

Vicky Phillips, of Thompsons Solicitors, who act for the BECTU sector said: "We are delighted to have assisted BECTU to secure victory for two of their members dismissed by Picturehouse. The case stands as a warning for employers who close their minds to what employees say in their own defence."

Pregnancy related dismissal was unlawful

Prospect member, Niki Savvides, wins her case of unfair dismissal and pregnancy discrimination against the British Museum.

Niki was employed on a one year fixed term contract working on a scheme to train and develop archaeologists in Iraq. The project was due to run for five years and she had expected that her role would continue with the project.

Towards the end of her contract Niki informed her managers she was pregnant. Initially there were discussions about maternity cover. However, the museum decided to change the emphasis of the role. Niki contended the job was so similar that she should have been offered it, but the museum refused to do this and said she could apply when it was advertised externally. Niki did apply but was unable to attend the interview because she was off sick with pregnancy complications and was told her application had been withdrawn.

Prospect presented a claim for automatic unfair dismissal and discrimination on the grounds of pregnancy and maternity.

At the tribunal hearing Niki was represented by Catrin Lewis of Garden Court Chambers. Alan Leighton, Prospect national secretary, appeared as a witness.

The tribunal found the change to the role meant there was a genuine redundancy situation, but as Niki was well suited to the role she should have been offered the job, so the dismissal was unfair. The tribunal also held it was discrimination for the museum to withdraw her application for the job when she told them she couldn't attend the interview because of her pregnancy.

Marion Scovell, head of Prospect legal, said: "The law provides special protection for women on maternity leave facing a redundancy situation. In this case the tribunal recognised that Niki should have been offered any suitable available vacancy and the museum's failure to do this made the dismissal unfair."

Niki said: "Going through this whole experience was very upsetting and there were many times I wanted to withdraw my case but I'm happy that I persisted and finally won. I am very grateful to Prospect, I wouldn't have made it through without all their help and support."

Successful appeal on industrial injuries benefit

A Prospect member, who works in the energy sector, has won his appeal tribunal.

Our member had worked for many years using vibratory tools. Over the years, he noticed a tingling sensation and numbness in his hands, with his fingers going white. He was diagnosed as suffering from Raynaud's syndrome.

His symptoms got increasingly worse. His fingers and hands would go numb and he would have difficulty with routine tasks such as carrying shopping. He applied for industrial injuries benefit, but was not successful because the DWP decided his condition was not severe enough. He sought advice from Prospect.

Frances Cusack, in Prospect's legal team, took up the case. Frances explains: "In order to qualify for industrial injuries disablement benefit, you must show that you are diagnosed as suffering from a condition that has arisen as a result of your employment and that your level of disablement is more than 14%."

Frances worked with the member to gather medical evidence and present his case. She represented him before the appeal tribunal. The Judge agreed that our member's condition had been under-assessed, and determined the disability at 20%, therefore making him eligible for the benefit.

Frances said: "We are delighted to win the appeal. If any other members are in a similar position, we would encourage them to contact Prospect for assistance."

Ask LegalEye

Q. I complained to my manager about a colleague making sexist comments in the office. My manager says that as the colleague is not addressing these to me personally there is nothing he can do. What can I do about this?

A. This is totally unacceptable. Firstly you should talk to your local Prospect representative for support. Intervention from senior managers or HR may resolve it. The situation is very likely to amount to unlawful sexual harassment under the Equality Act. The Act states that harassment is where there is unwanted conduct related to sex which has the purpose or effect of violating the other's dignity, or creating an intimidating, hostile, degrading, humiliating or offensive environment. It is clear there does not need to be a deliberate attempt to harass. See Prospect's Guide to Sexual Harassment for advice: bit.ly/2DsfFVJ

Q. I have been off work with depression for over nine months. I believe my depression arose because of the excessive levels of work I was expected to do. As it was my employer's fault, can I make a claim for damages?

A. You might be able to bring a claim for personal injury, but these cases are very difficult to establish. To succeed you would need to show the employer was negligent in their duty of care towards you, that this caused the injury and that it was reasonably foreseeable that the injury would occur. Cases often fail because of the need to show the employer could have foreseen your health would suffer. You should ring our solicitors' helpline number (see page 3) to be referred to a specialist personal injury lawyer. There might also be employment law issues, as under the Equality Act the employer must make reasonable adjustments for disabled workers; this could include adjusting work-loads or duties. So contact your Prospect negotiator for advice.

Note the answers in this column are only brief responses to the general issues raised, they should not be taken as a definitive outline of the law. In all cases you should seek advice from your Prospect Full Time Officer.
